You’re too young to know that!
“We made you by kissing.”
“Where did you hear that? You’ve been watching way too much YouTube.”
“Kids shouldn’t know about that stuff.”
“We’ll talk about it when you’re older.”
“I don’t have time to get into it right now.”
“Why would you ask that?”
“Did your older sister make you ask me this?”
“You should be talking about that at school soon.”
“It’s not polite to ask questions like that.”
“Ask your mom when she gets home.”
“Go ask your brother.”
“I don’t know, why don’t you look it up online?”

Great question! Can I ask where you heard that word/term/information?
That great scientific question deserves a scientific answer.
“I didn’t get this body science information when I was your age so I find it a bit difficult to talk about. But I know how important it is so I’m going to be as honest and open as I can be.”
“I’m so glad we’re having this conversation because I want you to be protected and safe. But it wouldn’t be a good idea to go to school tomorrow and tell your friends what we talked about. Let’s wait for adults in their lives to have a chance to teach them.”
“This might be information for someone older than you but I think you’re mature enough to handle it.”
“I’m so proud of you for asking such a scientific question! Let me think how best to answer it for you, let’s talk about it [insert appropriate time...before bed, when our guests leave, when we get out of the grocery store...].”
“This may be too much information but...”
“Remember this morning when I answered that question you had? Well, I think I can do a better job. Can I have a re-do?”
“That question tells me how maturely you’re thinking about this stuff. Nice work!”.
“Thank you for trusting me to answer that question for you. You can ask me anything and I will always give you an honest, scientific answer. You deserve to know the truth.”
